

The Working with Men Accredited Course develops a strong professional approach to community welfare/health workers who work with men and family relationship issues. The course combines theory and practice and focuses on the knowledge and skills that workers need when working with men, either individually or in groups.

What to expect from the training:

- Exploring the social and emotional challenges that impact on men's personal and family relationships
- Exploring how power, violence and suicide affect men's lives
- The challenges men face in moving towards mutuality and equality in relationships
- The changing male social and work-related roles
- The diversity of men who experience different socio-cultural issues
- Exploring the challenges when providing support services for men

Who is the training for:

This training is for experienced practitioners/workers who work with male clients. It requires a workplace project to be completed for accreditation purposes.
